Following a period working overseas, she moved to Canberra in 1951 to work at the Canberra Community Hospital and was later appointed to the Canberra Mothercraft Society, working in baby health clinics and providing care in rural areas. After taking time to raise her own family, in the early 1970s Sister Lipsett returned to the Mothercraft Society to work at the Queen Elizabeth II Home for Mothers and Babies (QEII, Alinga Street, City) becoming deputy director of nursing. Over a period of more than 18 years she provided support and practical advice to mothers at QEII and mentored health care professionals. Following retirement, she remained an active member of the Australian College of Midwives and wrote ‘No one right way’ (2004) later published as the acclaimed ‘Baby care: nurturing your baby, your way’ (2012). In 2006, the college initiated the ‘Rhodanthe Lipsett Award’ and in 2009, announced ‘The Rhodanthe Lipsett Indigenous Midwifery Trust’, a testament to the encouragement Lipsett provided to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people to study to become midwives.
