EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

The Fisheries Prohibition and Declaration 2010 (No 2) was made for several purposes under the Fisheries Act 2000 (the Act). Part 3 of the Act enables the Minister to set restrictions on fishing in several ways –

- section 13 permits the Minister, by way of a disallowable instrument, to prohibit the taking of fish absolutely or conditionally from public waters;
- section 15 permits the Minister, by way of a disallowable instrument, to set limits on the size and weight of fish taken;
- section 16 permits the Minister, by way of a disallowable instrument, to set limits on the number of fish taken; and
- section 17 permits the Minister, by way of a disallowable instrument, to regulate the types of fishing gear that may be used.

Section 49 of the Legislation Act 2001 allows an instrument to deal with more than one matter.

This instrument differs from the revoked instrument DI 2000-290, in two substantive ways. First, this instrument increases the minimum size of Murray Cod that may be taken to 60 centimetres. Secondly, the instrument also limits the number of Murray Cod longer than 100 centimetres that a person may take to one fish per day.

No other substantive changes have been made to fishing restrictions or requirements in the ACT, although the opportunity has been taken to redraft the previous instrument in line with current drafting principles.
